

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOCIAL SECURITY IN WASHINGTON

2018

In 1935, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the Social Security Act into law, he called it a cornerstone of a structure to be maintained and built upon by and for future generations. The first building block was insuring wages against their loss in old age.

Since then, we have expanded Social Security carefully and deliberately, first adding life insurance for survivors in 1939—initially for widows and dependent children, but eventually extended to widowers as well. Disability Insurance benefits were added in 1956. The automatic cost-of-living adjustment, added in 1972, was created to ensure that benefits retained their purchasing power until death.

We built, maintained and strengthened Social Security for a reason: to enable working men and women to protect themselves and their families, and because we, as a nation, value hard work, human dignity and caring for our parents, our children, our spouses, our neighbors and ourselves.

This report highlights the success of Social Security in Washington and the nation. The numbers tell part of the story—how many people receive benefits in Washington, in its congressional districts; how many dollars flow into these jurisdictions in a year; the types of benefits paid and the wide range of people who receive them.

As you read through this report, we urge you to think of the people you know: Family members who live in dignity in old age because they can count on a Social Security benefit, each and every month—benefits that they or another family member have earned. Workers who are able to support themselves and their families after a severe and work-ending disability. Widowed spouses and children who can remain financially stable after a worker's untimely death.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOCIAL SECURITY IN WASHINGTON

Think, too, of how Social Security, like the nation's highway system, is part of a rich legacy of those who came before, a legacy that continues to work through good times and bad. Throughout the difficult years of the Great Recession and its aftermath, Social Security has been even more vital than ever before for Washington residents, and the lifeblood of many small businesses and local economies. Virtually all of the jobs Social Security supports stay in America.

We built our Social Security system because it is the fairest, most efficient, universal, and secure way for Americans to maintain their standards of living when wages are lost due to death, disability, or retirement.

Without Social Security, the retirement security crisis facing today's workers would be even worse. Social Security is the foundation of financial stability in times of lost wages, and it works extremely well. No one is invulnerable to the risks of becoming disabled, dying young, or experiencing poor health in old age. Social Security protects financially virtually all Americans from these risks. Its protections should be expanded, not cut.

Social Security, like our highway system, is fundamental to our family and community life. In a period of stagnating wages and growing inequality, it will be even more important to future generations of retirees—today's middle-aged and younger workers.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOCIAL SECURITY IN WASHINGTON

We are much wealthier as a nation than we were when Social Security was first built, and in the years when its protections were extended and improved. Now it is our turn to maintain and improve it, as previous generations have done, for ourselves and for those who follow. To build our own legacy for our nation's children and grandchildren so when they become workers, they will have the economic security that Social Security provides.

Maintaining our Social Security system must never be treated as a matter of simple arithmetic. Any changes we make to its vital protections must advance its mission of providing economic security and dignity to the American people. Reducing Social Security's expenditures is not an end in itself; doing so in ways that threaten risks would solve the arithmetic problem of balancing income and outgo at the expense of Social Security's fundamental promise to the American people.

The solution is clear – it is time to expand on what works. We must expand, not cut, Social Security in order to improve economic security for all Americans in an era of stagnating wages and growing inequality.

At base, this is about what kind of nation we want to live in and leave for the generations to come. Today's workers have a stake in preserving Social Security for themselves, their families, and their children and grandchildren. And politicians have the opportunity to maintain, improve and pass on for future generations, just as our previous leaders and legislators have done for us.

KEY FACTS ABOUT SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE IN WASHINGTON

Social Security Works for Washington's Residents and Economy

- Social Security provided benefits to 1,291,198 Washingtonians in 2016, 1 in 6 (17.7 percent) residents.
- Washingtonians received Social Security benefits totaling $20.1 billion in 2016, an amount equivalent to 4.8 percent of the state's total personal income.
- The average Social Security benefit in Washington was $15,567 in 2016.
- Social Security lifted 467,979 Washingtonians out of poverty in 2016.

Social Security Works for Washington's Seniors

- Social Security provided benefits to 904,793 Washington retired workers in 2016, 7 in 10 (70.1 percent) beneficiaries.
- Social Security lifted 312,000 Washington residents aged 65 and older out of poverty in 2016. Without Social Security, the elderly poverty rate in Washington would have increased from 1 in 14 (6.6 percent) to 1 in 3 (33.9 percent).

Social Security Works for Washington's Workers with Disabilities

- Social Security provided disability benefits to 178,805 workers in 2016, 1 in 7 (13.8 percent) Washington beneficiaries.

Social Security Works for Washington's Women

- Social Security provided benefits to 659,548 Washington women in 2016, 2 in 11 (18.1 percent) Washington women.
- Social Security lifted 178,000 Washington women aged 65 and older out of poverty in 2016. Without Social Security, the poverty rate of elderly women would have increased from 1 in 13 (7.7 percent) to 3 in 8 (37.5 percent).

Social Security Works for Washington's Children

- Social Security provided benefits to 75,827 Washington children in 2016, 1 in 16 (5.9 percent) Washington beneficiaries.

Social Security Works for Washington's People of Color

- Social Security provided benefits to 1 in 5 (20.7 percent) African American households in Washington in 2016, 19,804 households.
- Social Security provided benefits to 1 in 8 (12.1 percent) Latino households in Washington in 2016, 27,758 households.
- Social Security provided benefits to 3 in 10 (29.5 percent) American Indian and Alaska Native households in Washington in 2016, 8,590 households.
- Social Security provided benefits to 2 in 11 (18.5 percent) Asian American, Hawaiian Native, and Pacific Islander households in Washington in 2016, 41,373 households.

Medicare Works for Washington's Residents and Economy

- 1,191,991 Washingtonians received Medicare benefits in 2015—1 in 6 state residents.
- Medicare provided $10.3 billion in benefits to Washingtonians in 2014—18.5 percent of all health care spending in the state. The average expenditure per Medicare beneficiary was $8,997.

Medicare Works for Washington's Seniors and People with Disabilities

- 1,017,380 of Washington's 1,191,991 Medicare beneficiaries were aged 65 or older in 2015—17 in 20 beneficiaries.
- 174,611 of Washington's 1,191,991 Medicare beneficiaries were people with disabilities in 2015—3 in 20 beneficiaries.