

Why does Alabama need MediKids?

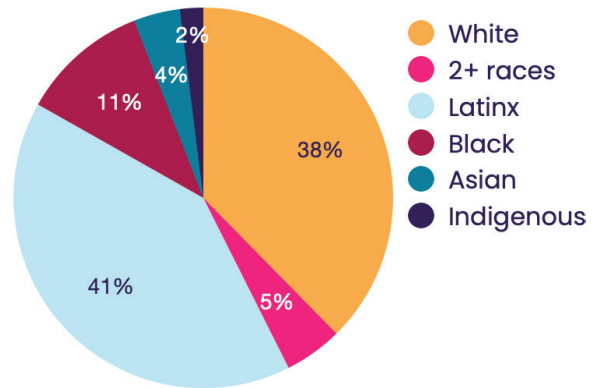

ALL MEANS ALL KIDS
Making Racial Equity a Cornerstone of MediKids

40,000 children in Alabama are uninsured

↪ 47%

of uninsured children in Alabama are people of color

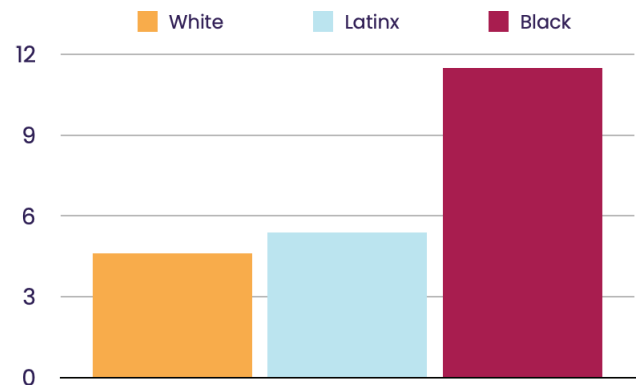

Share of uninsured children in the US, by race/ethnicity

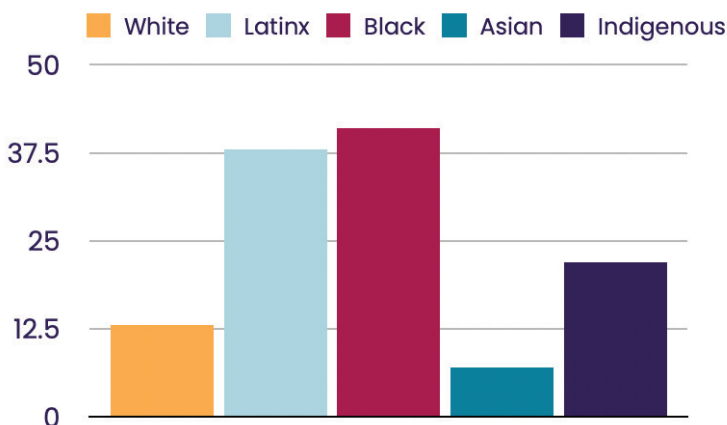

Demographics

- 42% of Alabama's child population are people of color
- Children of color are more likely to be uninsured
- Poverty disproportionately impacts communities of color in Alabama

US Infant Mortality (rate per 1,000 births)

AL child poverty rate, by race/ethnicity

Alabama needs MediKids

America's Uninsured Children are Majority People of Color

As projected by the US Census, in 2020 the majority of America's child population are people of color. Our health care system has failed in many ways to meet these new demographics. Prior to the pandemic, 62% of America's uninsured children were from non-white backgrounds.

In Alabama, 47% of uninsured children are people of color.

Consistent, high-quality coverage for health care is critical for all of us but particularly for children and adolescents. Right now, children gain and lose coverage as their families change employment, incomes, addresses, or as other changes happen in life: a parent graduates from school/college; a guardian marries or divorces; a breadwinner is injured or retires; etc. MediKids extends health care as a basic human right to every child living in America. Every child is automatically enrolled, and the coverage moves with children over the course of their childhoods and into early adulthood, no matter what their families do for a living or where they live.

Alabama's child population is on the verge of being majority people of color. In 2018, non-white children made up 42% of the population. Racial disparities in coverage for health care are unsustainable. Equity and fairness must be cornerstones for the health and well-being of all of Alabama's young people. We can build health justice with urgency through MediKids.

MediKids Addresses Minority Health Disparities

Universal coverage is not enough for children of color, many of whom do not have consistent access to high-quality, culturally competent care. MediKids directs resources and research to improve health equity at state and national levels for all medically underserved children. Through this work, we can upgrade services, deliver high-quality medical care, and improve

We Must End Systemic Racism in Health Care and Elsewhere

Even with the passage of MediKids, we will still need to dismantle racism, the biggest contributor to minority health disparities and poor health outcomes across all age groups, including children. Because the federal government will finance and administer MediKids, state governments will have increased freedom to improve a range of social determinants of health. Prior to the Covid19 pandemic, 24% of Alabama's children lived in poverty, with children of color being disproportionately affected. In 2019, among Alabama's 4th graders, 87% of Black, 80% of Latinx, and 62% of white students were not proficient in reading. State governments can lift these young lives at the local level as MediKids guarantees their health care at the national level.

MediKids is a critical tool for building racial justice, but it is by no means a cure-all. Building and maintaining equity will require levels of diligence and vigilance our country has not deployed yet but certainly must if we are to thrive. By guaranteeing every child in America the basic human right of health care under MediKids, we take an important step forward.

ALL MEANS ALL KIDS
Making Racial Equity a Cornerstone of MediKids

Join the All Means All Kids campaign at [socialsecurityworks.
org/allmeansallkids](https://socialsecurityworks.org/allmeansallkids)